Paula's Insights On DISC Behavior Style Similarities & Differences

Susie and Romantic Partner can support each other when one of them feels pushed. They both understand the discomfort.

For stress relief that satisfies both of them, they could participate in quiet social activities. Romantic Partner would be happiest if they chose the quiet social activities, but both should be able to invite others.

Susie and Romantic Partner could agree on which pace they would keep for their joint activities. Or if they are working on a task together, they could divide it into what could be done quickly and what could be done slowly.

When Susie gives Romantic Partner attention, Romantic Partner could give Susie approval.

Each of them could ask the other about how they want to maintain their dignity and routines.

Explaining who and how could become part of their daily conversations.
